2004 U.S. Olympic Team Trials - Men's Marathon Guide Supplement

U.S. Men's Olympic Marathon Team, Selection Races: 1900 to 1964

Updated from the 1996 U.S. Olympic Marathon Trials Media Guide, pages 85-89.

Below are listed the top finishers in all the official races used to select the United States Olympic marathon teams. Unless otherwise noted, all races below have been contested at the standard marathon distance of 26 miles, 385 yards (42,195 meters). In other cases a distance code is used: for example 24/1232 (39,750) equals 24 miles and 1,232 yards (39,750 meters).

U.S. Men's Olympic Marathon Trials History: 1968 to 2000

Since 1968, the U.S. Olympic marathon team has been selected at the Trials race. The top three earned coveted spots on the team (in recent Olympics, provided Olympic "A" standards were met). Before 1968, the U.S. Olympic marathoners were selected based on a series of marathon races. The history of the U.S. Olympic Marathon Trials, albeit short, is rich and storied. 1972 Olympic gold medalist and 1976 Olympic silver medalist in the marathon, Frank Shorter is the only man to finish first in consecutive U.S. Olympic Marathon Trials. In 1984, Pete Pfitzinger had the lead, lost the lead in the last mile and reclaimed the lead to win. At the 1988 Trials race, Mark Conover pulled a major upset with a stunning victory, while in 1996, Bob Kempainen won the race and a berth on his second Olympic team despite throwing up several times in the latter stages of the race.

Pete Pfitzinger, a relative unknown, broke away from the field just past the halfway point and built a 150 meter lead. In the last mile, John Tuttle passed Pfitzinger and then Alberto Salazar passed both of them. In the final 400 meters, Pfitzinger found another gear and passed Tuttle and overcame Salazar, the race favorite, in the last meters. At the Olympics in Los Angeles, the Trials champion was the top American, 11th in 2:13:53.

Mark Conover surprised the field and the pundits with the win. Conover and Ed Eyestone took control of the race after 17 miles and worked together over the final miles. With a mile remaining, Conover who came into the Trials race with a 2:18:03 qualifier pulled away from Eyestone for the stunning victory. 1984 Trials winner Pete Pfitzinger surged late to earn the final Olympic spot.

Under warm, windy conditions, Bill Reifsnnyder and Keith Brantly tried to run away with the Trials race, but near 22 miles, the trio of Steve Spence, Ed Eyestone and Bob Kempainen caught the duo. Spence, the 1991 World Championships marathon bronze medalist, used a 4:49 26th mile to win the race in 2:12:43, a trip to Barcelona, Spain and $58,000. Eyestone, a 1988 Olympic marathoner, secured his second Olympic berth with his second place performance (2:12:51), while Kempainen who overcame injury surprised the field by earning the third and final U.S. Olympic marathon team position.

At the 1996 Olympic Marathon Trials, Bob Kempainen, a 1992 Olympic marathoner, brought new meaning to the term "guts" with his performance. Just past 21 miles, as Kempainen pulled away from Mark Coogan and Keith Brantly, he began to vomit. His second eruption staggered him for a moment, but he calmly wiped his chin, gathered himself and incredibly increased his lead. Despite his distress, he ran the 23rd and 24th miles in 4:42 and 4:33 respectively which finally broke Coogan and Brantly. Kempainen, the fastest U.S. marathoner (2:08:47 at Boston in '94), maintained his lead and crossed the finish line in 2:12:45. Kempainen's gutsy effort earned him another trip to the Olympics, a record first place marathon prize ($100,000), a course record and his first marathon win in seven attempts. With about 400 meters left, Coogan passed Brantly, the defending champion, to claim his trip to Atlanta and $40,000 with a 2:13:05, a personal record. Brantly, the 1995 USA Running Circuit champion, captured the final Olympic berth in 2:13:22 and $30,000. Perennial national contender, Steve Plasencia finished fourth (2:14:20), while Marco Ochoa (seeded #72) followed two seconds later in 2:14:22. Under cool conditions on a challenging course, nine runners set personal records (Coogan, Ochoa, Keith Dowling, Jon Warren, David Morris, Terrence Mahon, Craig Woshner, Tom Redding and Steve Wilson).

Like the Women's Trials race in Columbia, the U.S. Men's Olympic Marathon Trials faced difficult weather conditions and a challenging course. At the start, the temperature was 61 degrees and the humidity 84 percent and as the day progressed it got worse. After several frontrunners, Peter DeLaCerde pushed the pace at 15 miles and went for a sub 2:14 time (the Olympic "A" standard). After 20 miles, Rod DeHaven began to gain on DeLaCerde as his lead shrunk to 23 seconds. At mile 22, DeHaven cut DeLaCerde's lead to just 8 seconds. At 1:55:28 into the race, DeHaven took the lead from the Alamosa, Colo. resident who did not respond to the move.

DeLaCerde, however, began a comeback during the 24th mile, running just 2 seconds behind the third fastest qualifier. DeHaven, 33, from Madison, Wisc. responded and picked up the pace with a 4:56 mile, stretching his lead to 13 seconds over DeLaCerde. The computer programmer continued to stretch his lead and won easily in 2:15:30. DeLaCerde finished second in 2:16:18, with 1996 Olympian Mark Coogan 3rd in 2:17:04.

"It was a race of attrition, and that's the way it was. I'm ecstatic but in a sad way because I'm the only one (who qualified for the Olympics). It's a bittersweet feeling," said the South Dakota State graduate.

Three men in the top 10 set personal records: DeLaCerde, Stolz and Campbell.
